CCleanerLaparoscopic inguinal hernia repair with polypropylene mesh in children: a prospective randomized trial.

The most widely used material in pediatric inguinal hernia surgery is polypropylene. In the last 10 years, the laparoscopic approach has been popularized, in spite of the few studies comparing laparoscopic and open hernia repair in children. Therefore, we designed this prospective randomized trial to compare conventional open hernia repair with laparoscopic repair. Between March 2008 and December 2010, 30 children were enrolled in the study. At the initial surgical exploration, an elective mesh repair was performed in each child. In the open group (15 cases), the hernia defect was closed with 3-0 vicryl without mesh. In the laparoscopic group (15 cases), after the peritoneal cavity was opened, the hernia defect was reduced and closed with polypropylene mesh, then the peritoneal cavity was closed. Postoperative pain and early return to normal activity were evaluated with the use of a visual analog scale. Duration of surgery, time until return to normal 77a5ca646e
