on .Viability and necrosis of three types of
chondrocytes exposed to mechanical stress.
Isolated bovine articular chondrocytes were subjected to compressive stress at 1 MPa for up to 24 h. Cell viability was assessed by electron microscopy, dye exclusion, lactate
dehydrogenase (LDH) release, and Trypan blue dye exclusion. The three types of chondrocytes, resting, prealignment (implanted in agar gel), and cytopathic, were compared. Four hundred cells were examined in the electron microscope and more than 40% of the cells showed signs of damage when exposed to 24 h of stress. Most cytopathic chondrocytes died within 24 h of stress. Only 15% of prealignment chondrocytes exposed to stress were necrotic. The results show that mechanical stress causes necrosis of chondrocytes in the absence of biochemical injury. They also suggest that cytopathic cells are more sensitive to stress.

Q: How does .NET (AppDomain) Threading or Async relate to System.Threading.Thread? I have a bit of a problem with understanding the difference between .NET Threading and the System.Threading.Thread Class. From what I understand (thanks to answers provided on SO) the System.Threading.Thread class is essentially just a wrapper for unmanaged threads, wrapped by .NET's CLR. This seems to make sense because I can't find any documentation to suggest otherwise. The problem I am currently having (which I have been struggling to find relevant answers to) is that I understand that the .NET Framework provides the ability to run Asynchronous methods, via the Async/Await keywords. This seems to be very good to me, because it allows me to code something like var task = new GetSomeDataTask( "service", "parameters" ); await task.StartAsync();

Instead of this

Application.Current.Dispatcher.BeginInvoke( (Action)(() => { GetSomeData( "service", "parameters" ); }) );

Which I have seen
